Secures financing through warrant programme

On 16 April, Ascelia Pharma announced the outcome of its TOI warrant programme, which ended on 15 April. In total, 19.9m new shares were subscribed for, implying a subscription rate of about 96%. This is positive news and in line with our modelled outcome. The company will now receive SEK43m before transaction costs, which will support continued regulatory work with the company's leading drug candidate Orvigance. It will also pay back SEK20m of its loan to Fenja Capital. Following the company's announcement of a positive pre-NDA meeting in March, we continue to expect an NDA submission in mid-2025, which could enable an approval of the drug in the US during 2026.

We recently had the opportunity to host a Q&A session with Magnus Corfitzen, the CEO of the company. Naturally, much of the discussion centred on the path to market approval for Orvigance and the status of ongoing partnering discussions. While the company could not share too many specifics, there were still some key takeaways worth highlighting.

When it comes to deal economics, the company emphasised the importance of securing an upfront payment. The idea is that it signals a strong commitment from the partner and ensures they have 'skin in the game'. However, the company does not seem to have a strong preference for whether a deal is signed before or after the NDA submission. That said, we think a deal is more likely to materialise later this year, following the NDA submission. In our experience, partnering discussions tend to take time. Even if data looks compelling, potential partners still need to plan and evaluate market access and reimbursement strategies. We also touched on the company's second asset, Oncoral. Our impression is that it is planning to initiate a Phase II trial in gastric cancer as soon as funding is secured – likely from an upfront payment in a future partnership deal.

Our fair value range is SEK5–8 per share. We still see a partnership deal for Orvigance as the most important near-term catalyst for the stock.

Equity story

Near term: 6–12m

Important upcoming milestones include a potential licensing agreement for Orviglance. We assume a licensing agreement in 2025 where the company receives an upfront payment of SEK 100m, along with a milestone package and royalties on net sales.

Long term: 5Y+

Ascelia Pharma's long-term equity story centres on Orviglance securing market approval, enabling the company to generate revenue through milestones and royalties. These funds will support ongoing R&D efforts for other pipeline projects.

Key risks:

- Regulatory hurdles
- Commercial acceptance
- Failing to find a good partner

Company description

Ascelia Pharma is a biotechnology company that focuses on orphan drugs in oncology. The company's goal is to develop orphan drugs with a relatively high likelihood of reaching the market (contrast agents, reformulation of known substances). Orviglance targets a key market by offering a non-gadolinium contrast agent for MRI liver scans, specifically designed for patients with impaired kidney function.

Key industry drivers

- The contrast agent market is driven by the rising prevalence of cancer and the global adoption of advanced imaging technologies.

Industry outlook

- We estimate Orviglance's market potential at USD400m in the US and Europe. Given the risks associated with conventional contrast agents in the target population, we see a clear and essential role for Orviglance.

Risks

Regulatory hurdles: Orviglance needs regulatory approval from agencies like the FDA, and any delays, additional data requests, or changing requirements could push back its market launch, impacting revenue.

Commercial acceptance: Even with regulatory approval, commercial success is not guaranteed. Healthcare providers, hospitals, and insurers need to adopt Orviglance for it to generate strong sales.

Failing to find a good partner: A strong commercial partner is crucial for launching Orviglance globally. Without one, Ascelia Pharma could struggle with distribution of the product. A weak partnership, or failing to secure one at all, could limit sales potential.
